2025 - 2026

Dear Family, Friends and Explorers of All Ages,

I first encountered Dr. Montessori's words a few years into my own search for a better, more natural way to educate our children. The clarity and authenticity of her work made an immediate impression on my identity as a teacher, and launched me into an early childhood journey that continues to this day. Can it really be true that children naturally write before they read? Do exercises in Practical Life genuinely and positively influence a child's overall development in ways that measurably affect academics? Do works like the Pink Tower or the Broad Stair truly accelerate cognition and visual-spatial recognition? Like the children in our Montessori environment, my own questions didn't stop. Each answer led to a new path, new excitement, new questions!

To answer your first question, yes, your child will do remarkable things within a Montessori cohort. Writing begins early at our house with the Movable Alphabet, progressing seamlessly and naturally to paper and pencil. Your child will be multiplying four-digit numbers, reciting Robert Frost poems, identifying nouns and verbs and coaching you in remembering the fifty states, while also bringing meaningful (and willing) help whenever you prepare a family meal, and all of that before ever setting foot in first-grade. Three years in a Montessori primary program impacts childhood development in ways that will last a lifetime.

For some, those academic feats are the high-point of Montessori primary education. For me, they're simply the byproduct of our profound and exciting work. The real heart of our work can be found within the simple, everyday moments within our house. From the morning greeting to great adventures on our cedar playset to the joy of counting the Thousand Bead Chain, every minute of a Montessori day exists within a thoughtful environment specifically prepared for your child. Somewhere between the rhythms of routine and discovery, exploration and celebration, leading and following, life is transformed by wonder. Each child develops according to their own genius. And all of us, guides, parents, family members and friends, are changed for the better.

At Maria's House Doylestown, we join Dr. Montessori in knowing that each child's future is being formed right here, right now. They're hardwired to be curious, to search and explore, guided by their own inner muse. It's our privilege to work in concert with you, with your family, and with your child, celebrating each and every day that they're with us, supporting them, keeping them safe, and welcoming them to the richness of early childhood. I look forward to answering all of your questions as they arise. In the meantime, I wish you and your young explorer all the best. These are truly remarkable years.

Sincerely,

Laine Walker, MA, NBCT
Executive Director

The Difference

Take a breath. Remember a time that you went someplace new, seeing things you'd never seen, making sense of unfamiliar sounds, decoding shapes, colors, tastes, customs, ideas and more. That memory is your doorway into the world of the 3-6 year-olds around you. Wonder is their world.

Eventually they'll separate work from play, learning from rest, exploring from relaxing, but right now they're what Maria Montessori called "an exquisite whole, driven by their own perfect curiosity, emerging, absorbing, always becoming." We use all of our skill to guide them.

Researcher, scientist, pedagogue and early-childhood pioneer, Dr. Montessori was remarkable by any standard. One-hundred-and-eleven years ago, Italy's indomitable first female physician returned to Rome's San Lorenzo neighborhood where she had served as a resident intern, and began the practical work of restoring early childhood education. Maria's first Casa di Bambini (children's house) drew over sixty young neighborhood children. Their days were carefully structured, built around respect, cleanliness, order, beauty and the simple tasks of everyday life. Through it all, Maria wove a progressive series of intellectual exercises, gross and fine motor activities, songs, movements, games and conversation. Within months, children from the house began exhibiting greater concentration, self-direction, extraordinary skill with mathematics, language and creative collaboration. Four months later, at the urging of the Italian government, Maria opened her second site. Her nascent work had already attracted the attention of the world, as it offered a hopeful alternative to the failing institutional educational practices of the post-industrial age.

Hundreds of books and thousands of journal articles document the rest of her story. For us, it's led right here, as we bring Maria's time-proven work to a new location in our lovingly restored historic mansion that is, in so many ways, very close to home.

So, if you have a particularly special three-to-six-year-old in your life and you'd like to explore the Montessori difference, spend a few minutes on our website, then call us, speak with one of our directors and arrange a visit. In the meantime, always remember what an extraordinary gift early childhood years are to the young souls around you, a time when everything is new, undiscovered, and waiting to be explored. Maria's House is here to help.

Our Director

Laine Walker, MA, NBCT
Montessori Master Teacher

Inspire. Think about the word. It's Latin root, inspirare, is all about breathing in, about staying alive, putting oxygen into the bloodstream, growing, developing and flourishing in healthy ways.

Laine Walker is the Director and Principal Guide of Maria's House. A career educator, National Board Certified Teacher and mom, Laine inspires and supports our staff, guiding the continuous professional development of MHMI guides and assistants, channeling the spirit and vision of Dottoressa Montessori throughout our house and our program. A Montessori Diplomat of the Princeton Center for Teacher Education with a Masters in Educational Administration and advanced post-graduate work in early child development, Laine creates and maintains program standards that meet or exceed those established by the American Montessori Society, ensuring that each child is welcomed as an honored guest, treated with respect and hospitality, and gently guided to explore the wonder and beauty of simple things.

Her work as a Pennsylvania and Texas certified teacher drew Laine to Maria Montessori, whose understanding and experience led to a way of working with children that was as natural as it was revolutionary. Laine breathes Montessori, and inspires us all.

Free one child's potential and you will transform the world.
